

OVERVIEW

Introduction

Veena Bahl presents an overview of the issues considered in the symposium and of the urgency in addressing minority ethnic needs in relation to cancer. She provides a summary of the cancer burden among minority ethnic groups and of attitudes, beliefs and practices that may hinder effective prevention and treatment. She then outlines various studies supported by the Department of Health aimed at improving uptake of services by members of black and minority ethnic groups.